Stanley Thomas Mrus was born in Stamford on January 26, 1927 and passed away at home in New Canaan on October 18, 2014. Stan grew up in Stamford and moved to New Canaan as a young married family man where he lived for over sixty years.

Stan graduated from Stamford High School and then enrolled in Notre Dame University. His studies were interrupted during the war years when he entered and graduated from the U.S. Merchant Marine Academy in the Midshipman Class of 1948 with a BS in Marine Engineering. After a serving his time with the Merchant Marines, which included sailing to Africa and South America, he resumed his studies at Notre Dame University and graduated in 1950 with the Class of 1948 with a degree in Mechanical Engineering. He worked at a number of firms, which gave him an interesting and varied career. His assignments were diverse and included projects for NASA and the Nuclear Regulatory Commission. His most satisfying assignment, though, was with AMF where he developed robotics for industrial use. Stan finished his career at Burns & Roe, an engineering consulting firm, as a lead engineer on the Waste-to-Energy team.
