“ There wasn't a person who he talked too that he didn't touch in some way. Whether it was family, friends or someone he just met, conversation was effortless, as it should have been from a man who was always genuine. On many nights, I was fortunate enough to talk with him for hours. It was so fascinating listening to someone who knew so much about so many different things, as he recalled every detail like it was yesterday. You were a mans man and role model to everyone in your family as a husband, brother, father, grandfather and great grandfather. I've always called you Mr. Shawluk instead of grandpa because that was the respect that I thought you deserved. There wont be a day that goes by that you wont be missed, but as we look up and realize that your smiling down, we can smile back knowing your in a better place now.
