“Nirva Dugas was my grandmother on my mother’s side. She was a light, a woman so engraved in her faith because of the hardships she faced. She was such a strong woman and anyone who knew her could attest to her character. I loved my grandma so much. I remember visiting her every summer as a kid and spending weeks at her home. She would always make sure we were fed when we got there. We would worship with her at her home , sing songs of worship, and sometimes play her cassettes or cds on her radio. I loved when she would get really playful and start to dance with us. That would make me so happy like: “yeah! she’s still got it!” I miss my grandma so much. She went to see Him long before I could say my goodbyes and it crushes me. But I like to think she’s happy where she is now...no more suffering. I just have so many unanswered questions. She was the first person whose death I had to mourn and am still mourning. I miss braiding her hair in box braids for her before she’d go to her service or to sleep. I miss washing the dishes for her even when I didn’t feel like it. I even miss when she’d insist we take things home with us for the bus ride when our hands were already filled. She was so sweet and she cared for us so very much.

*Nirva Dugas, I love you, and miss you, and I'll never forget you.
Maybe one day we can be together again.*
